

25
Mar ~~25~~ 1865

Since the summer of 1864 Grant had besieged Richmond and Petersburg.

The progress of the siege had been slow but persistent until, some after the middle of Feb. 1865, he began to consider the eventuality of abandoning both cities.

He infused an energy into his sortie of Mar 25, which, though the attempt was unsuccessful, demonstrated that there was still a great deal of fight in him and his Army. The Union lines did not entirely encircle Richmond & Petersburg but left open an avenue of escape to the west and southwest the Railroads to both cities were in operation Grant feared the union of Lee's & Johnston's army
